FOREWORD

This is a preliminary list of the books published in English about Iraq (Mesopotamia) from 1800 to 2000, and forms part of the efforts of the newly-formed International Centre for Anglo-Iraqi Studies (ICAIS) to document and present all publications written in English about Iraq & Mesopotamia. My bibliography aims to assist in the preservation of the intellectual and international heritage related to Iraq, particularly after three decades of war which led to Iraq losing many libraries, museums and other intellectual heritage items.

This edition contains a selection of approximately 2,500 book titles, mainly first editions. Future editions of this bibliography will contain approximately 5,000 book titles. There are, however, approximately 6,000 – 9,000 books published in English about Iraq & Mesopotamia between 1800 and 2000. Many books about Iraq & Mesopotamia during this period have also been published in other languages. It is preferable for similar bibliographies to be dedicated to each language.

This list of books covers two main aspects. The first being Mesopotamia in its historic sense (ie, books to cover the history and archaeological sites of Mesopotamia such as Sumer, Babylonia and Assyria), and the second being Mesopotamia as it refers to the modern land covering most of the current Iraq and parts of Syria and Turkey.

The British have used the ancient Greek name “Mesopotamia” to define the land which is now Iraq in their publications until 1920. The modern Iraq, with its new name and political borders, state and government, was established in 1920, although the names “Iraq” and “Irak” have been used for this area for centuries. A number of books published in English between 1914 and 1920 refer to the British “Mesopotamia Campaign”, the military campaign between the British and Ottoman empires which resulted in the end of the Ottoman Empire and the start of the British influence and mandate in Iraq. This list of books also covers aspects of Iraq's cultural, social, political and daily life.

This bibliography mainly consists of "books" written in English, mainly or partly, about Iraq & Mesopotamia. It does not include the journals, magazines and periodicals which have been published in English about Iraq & Mesopotamia between 1800 and 2000. I envisage a separate future bibliography to cover these journals, magazines and periodicals, referring to each journal or magazine with all articles published therein between 1800 and 2000 (eg, a page dedicated to the National Geographic Magazine's articles on Iraq from 1888 to 2000, and also with other journals such as Time Magazine and other periodicals).

This list has been designed to follow a chronological timescale from 1800 to 2000, and shows the changing face of Iraq & Mesopotamia through this time. By going through the chronological timescale of 200 years, the readers will feel that they are in a time machine as they note the number of publications and the nature of these publications. For instance, many of the books published between 1840 and 1870 focus on ancient history (eg, excavations at Nimrud). Many of the books published between 1914 and 1930 focus on the British "Mesopotamia campaign" and the role of Britain in the newly established state of Iraq. From 1990 to 2000, many of the books focus on the Iraqi-Kuwaiti issues and the 1991 Gulf War and its aftermath.

Whilst a small number of bibliographies have dealt with Iraq, these bibliographies have been arranged by author and subject and not by following a chronological timescale. The timescale given in this bibliography (1800-2000) is not covered by the other bibliographies referred to. At this stage I have arranged this bibliography as a preliminary list and this will be published online, giving readers the option to search by timeframe, subject and author. Readers will also have the option to leave comments on any book referred to in this bibliography by following the relevant weblinks, which may also be used to download the books referred to where possible.

The sources contained in this bibliography have been gathered over several years and have been taken from my own personal research and library, and from the physical and electronic sources of the British Library and the Library of Congress, and from the electronic sources of the California libraries, in addition to internet search engines and other websites such as Amazon and Ebay.

I hope that this bibliography will highlight and honour the work published by those who studied and visited Iraq (Mesopotamia) in the last 200 years, and to uncover many forgotten books published during this time. This bibliography seeks to assist readers, researchers and linguists in their quest to find suitable sources to further their study and knowledge of Iraq & Mesopotamia.
